LEADERSHIP AND MANAGEMENT

WHY STUDY MANAGEMENT?

The words 'leaders' and 'managers' are often used in the business world and are sometimes used interchangeably as well. Many consider leadership and management as mutually exclusive while others claim that there are many common qualities required in both the domains. The leader vs manager debate, therefore, has takers for both sides.

Leadership development programmes are crucial to the long-term success of every organisation. Whether you believe leaders are born or made, in order to build a high-performing team, optimise your people's expertise and prepare the next generation of well-rounded leaders, you have to invest in leadership development

Work in-and-through organisations

Your career will surely involve working in organisations, regardless of your chosen career path. As a Manager or Leader or indeed in any job – your effectiveness at work depends on your understanding of the organisation that you work in, and how to get things done through it.

Improve managerial skills and abilities

Develop a sense of responsibility for active participation in making improvements. As you develop the talents and abilities in management, strengthen your needs of improving performance.

Effectively manage change

Leadership development helps companies navigate challenging times by increasing people's ability to respond rapidly in unpredictable business environments. Effective leadership is essential during critical times such as drastic change, workforce reductions, corporate restructuring, political upheaval and new competition.

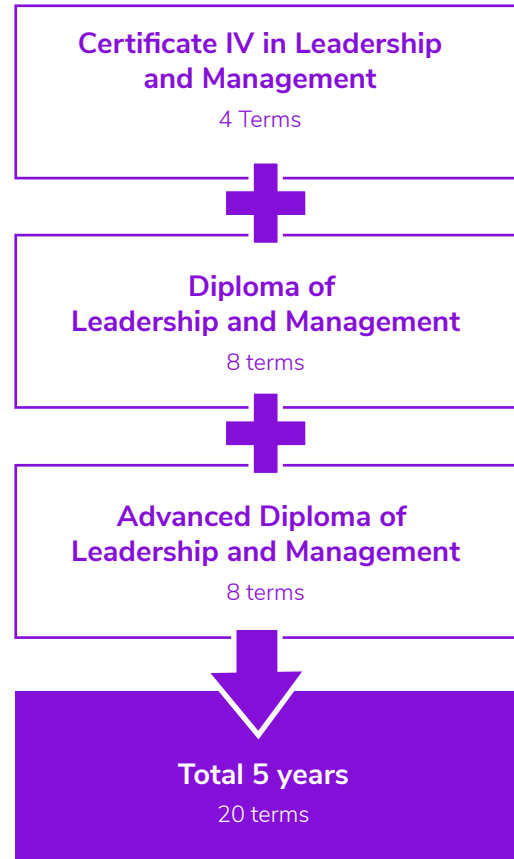

Be a manager or manage your own business

If you become a manager, your role will be to direct, lead, plan, manage, encourage, cajole, coach and organise all activity within the organisation. Or maybe you'd prefer to be your own boss – self-employed, an entrepreneur, or the head of your own company?
